

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

JEANNIE M. MOORE,

Plaintiff,

v.

CAROLYN W. COLVIN, Acting
Commissioner of the Social Security Administration,

Defendant.

CASE NO. 2:15-cv-00360 JRC

ORDER ON PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT

This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c), Fed. R. Civ. P. 73 and Local Magistrate Judge Rule MJR 13 (see also Notice of Initial Assignment to a U.S. Magistrate Judge and Consent Form, Dkt. 5; Consent to Proceed Before a United States Magistrate Judge, Dkt. 6). This matter has been fully briefed (see Dkt. 13, 16, 17).

After considering and reviewing the record, the Court concludes that the ALJ erred when failing to credit fully plaintiff's credibility based on plaintiff's activities of daily living and the objective medical evidence. The ALJ utilized circular reasoning by

1 failing to credit plaintiff's testimony regarding how she conducted her activities of daily 2 living and making assumptions that plaintiff conducted her activities of daily living 3 differently without any substantial evidence supporting those assumptions. The ALJ then 4 used those assumptions as a basis for the failure to credit fully plaintiff's credibility.

5 Because this error is not harmless error, this matter should be reversed and 6 remanded pursuant to sentence four of 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) to the Acting Commissioner 7 for further administrative proceedings consistent with this order.

8 BACKGROUND

10 Plaintiff, JEANNIE M. MOORE, was born in 1956 and was 50 years old on the 11 amended alleged date of disability onset of September 6, 2006 (see AR. 10, 25, 111, 121-12 22). Plaintiff graduated from high school and is a certified nursing assistant (AR. 27).
13 Plaintiff has work experience as a housekeeper, program facilitator for a nutrition service 14 and certified nursing assistant for home care (AR. 150-54). Plaintiff's last employment 15 ended when she was off because of pain more than she was working and felt it was not 16 fair to the client (AR. 33).

17 According to the ALJ, through the date last insured, plaintiff has at least the severe 18 impairments of "lumbar degenerative disc disease, degenerative joint disease, and 19 osteoarthritis (20 CFR 404.1520(c))" (AR. 12).

20 At the time of the hearing, plaintiff was living with her husband (AR. 27).

21 PROCEDURAL HISTORY

22
23 Plaintiff's application for disability insurance benefits ("DIB") pursuant to 42 24 U.S.C. § 423 (Title II) of the Social Security Act was denied initially and following

1 reconsideration (see AR. 52-55, 56-60). Plaintiff's requested hearing was held before 2 Administrative Law Judge Mary Gallagher Dilley ("the ALJ") on July 31, 2013 (see AR.
3 21-50). On November 14, 2013, the ALJ issued a written decision in which she 4 concluded that plaintiff was not disabled pursuant to the Social Security Act (see AR. 7-5 20).

6 In plaintiff's Opening Brief, plaintiff raises the following issues: (1) Whether or 7 not the ALJ erred in determining that plaintiff had the residual functional capacity to 8 perform light work, could lift and/or carry 20 pounds occasionally and 10 pounds 9 frequently, could stand and/or walk for 6 hours in an 8-hour work day, could sit for 6 10 hours in an 8-hour work day, could frequently climb, balance, stoop, kneel, crouch, and 11 crawl, and could frequently reach in all directions; (2) Whether or not the ALJ erred in 12 finding that not all of claimant's symptom allegations were credible; (3) Whether or not 13 the ALJ erred in assigning the amount of weight given to the opinions of treating 14 physician Daniel Garcia, M.D.; and (4) Whether or not the ALJ erred in determining that 15 plaintiff was capable of performing past work as a housekeeper and dietary assistant (see 16 Dkt. 13, p. 1). Because the Court concludes that issue number two is dispositive, this 17 issue will be discussed first and the remaining issues will be discussed only briefly.
18

19 STANDARD OF REVIEW

20 Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 405(g), this Court may set aside the Commissioner's 21 denial of social security benefits if the ALJ's findings are based on legal error or not 22 supported by substantial evidence in the record as a whole. Bayliss v. Barnhart, 427 F.3d 23

1 1211, 1214 n.1 (9th Cir. 2005) (citing Tidwell v. Apfel, 161 F.3d 599, 601 (9th Cir.
2 1999)).

3 DISCUSSION

4 (1) Whether or not the ALJ erred in finding that not all of plaintiff's 5 symptom allegations were credible.

6 Plaintiff contends that the ALJ erred by failing to credit all of plaintiff's 7 allegations, while defendant contends that the ALJ's reasoning is proper. When failing to 8 credit fully plaintiff's credibility, the ALJ relied on plaintiff's activities of daily living 9 and the objective medical evidence (see AR. 14-15).

10 According to the Ninth Circuit, "we may not take a general finding -- an 11 unspecified conflict between Claimant's testimony about daily activities and her reports 12 to doctors -- and comb the administrative record to find specific conflicts." Burrell v.
13 Colvin, 775 F.3d 1133, 1138 (9th Cir. 2014). If an ALJ rejects the testimony of a 14 claimant once an underlying impairment has been established, the ALJ must support the 15 rejection "by offering specific, clear and convincing reasons for doing so." Smolen v.
16 Chater, 80 F.3d 1273, 1284 (9th Cir. 1996) (citing Dodrill v. Shalala, 12 F.3d 915, 918 17 (9th Cir.1993)); see also Reddick v. Chater, 157 F.3d 715, 722 (9th Cir. 1998) (citing 18 Bunnell v. Sullivan, supra, 947 F.2d at 343, 346-47).

19
20 The ALJ relied in part on plaintiff's activities of daily living when failing to credit 21 fully plaintiff's allegations regarding limitations, noting that plaintiff was independent in 22 her self-care; was able to prepare complete, multicourse meals; and "stated that she was 23 able to complete household chores including dishes, laundry, dusting, pulling weeds, and 24

1 pruning roses” (AR. 15). The ALJ found that if plaintiff’s “back and neck pain were as 2 significant as alleged, it is unlikely that she would have been able to engage in these 3 many activities” (id.). However, in so finding, the ALJ completely disregarded plaintiff’s 4 testimony regarding how she conducted her activities of daily living, without explanation 5 and without support from the record.

6       Regarding activities of daily living, the Ninth Circuit repeatedly has “asserted that 7 the mere fact that a plaintiff has carried on certain daily activities . . . . does not in any 8 way detract from her credibility as to her overall disability.” Orn v. Astrue, 495 F.3d 625, 9 639 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting Vertigan v. Halter, 260 F.3d 1044, 1050 (9th Cir. 2001)).
10 The Ninth Circuit specified “the two grounds for using daily activities to form the basis 11 of an adverse credibility determination: (1) whether or not they contradict the claimant’s 12 other testimony and (2) whether or not the activities of daily living meet “the threshold 13 for transferable work skills.” Orn, supra, 495 F.3d at 639 (citing Fair, supra, 885 F.2d at 14 603). As stated by the Ninth Circuit, the ALJ “must make ‘specific findings relating to 15 the daily activities’ and their transferability to conclude that a claimant’s daily activities 16 warrant an adverse credibility determination. Orn, supra, 495 F.3d at 639 (quoting Burch 17 v. Barnhart, 400 F.3d 676, 681 (9th Cir. 2005)). The ALJ here made no finding regarding 18 plaintiff’s activities of daily living constituting transferable work skills.
19

20       The Ninth Circuit recently revisited this issue of activities of daily living and their 21 consistency with pain-related impairments described by a claimant: 22

23       [T]he ALJ erred in finding that these activities, if performed in the 24 manner that [the claimant] described, are inconsistent with the pain-related impairments that [the claimant] described in her testimony. We

1 have repeatedly warned that ALJs must be especially cautious in 2 concluding that daily activities are inconsistent with testimony about 3 pain, because impairments that would unquestionably preclude work and 4 all the pressures of a workplace environment will often be consistent 5 with doing more than merely resting in bed all day. See, e.g., Smolen v.
 6 Chater, 80 F.3d , 1273, 1287 n.7 (9th Cir. 1996) (“The Social Security 7 Act does not require that claimants be utterly incapacitated to be eligible 8 for benefits, and many home activities may not be easily transferable to a 9 work environment where it might be impossible to rest periodically or 10 take medication.” (citation omitted in original)); Fair v. Bowen, 885 F.2d 11 597, 603 (9th Cir. 1989) (“[M]any home activities are not easily 12 transferable to what may be the more grueling environment of the 13 workplace, where it might be impossible to periodically rest or take 14 medication.”) Recognizing that “disability claimants should not be 15 penalized for attempting to lead normal lives in the face of their 16 limitations,” we have held that “[o]nly if [her] level of activity were 17 inconsistent with [a claimant’s] claimed limitations would these 18 activities have any bearing on [her] credibility.” Reddick v. Chater, 157 19 F.3d 715, 722 (9th Cir. 1998) (citations omitted in original); see also 20 Bjornson v. Astrue, 671 F.3d 640, 647 (7th Cir. 2012) (“The critical 21 difference between activities of daily living and activities in a full-time 22 job are that a person has more flexibility in scheduling the former than 23 the latter, can get help from other persons . . . , and is not held to a 24 minimum standard of performance, as she would be by an employer. The failure to recognize these differences is a recurrent, and deplorable, feature of opinions by administrative law judges in social security disability cases.” (citations omitted in original)).

Garrison v. Colvin, 759 F.3d 955, 1016 (9th Cir. 2014).

17 Regarding self-care, plaintiff indicated that she had “to sit while showering” (AR.
 18 143). Plaintiff also indicated that when preparing large meals, she had to “sit and rest 19 during prep” (AR. 144). She further indicated that how often she does laundry, dusts, 20 pulls weeds and prunes roses “depends on how I’m feeling” (id.). These indications are 21 consistent with plaintiff’s testimony that completing acts of self-care and doing each of 22 her activities of daily living is a “long, drawn out process” (AR. 39). Plaintiff testified 23 that she would eat; then have to sit down and rest; and then she could take a shower; and 24

1 then have to sit down and rest before getting dressed (see id.). The ALJ's implied finding 2 that plaintiff conducts her daily activities differently than she indicates is not based on 3 substantial evidence in the record, but is based on speculation. See SSR 86-8, 1986 SSR 4 LEXIS 15 at *22 (an ALJ may not speculate). In order to avoid circular reasoning, an 5 ALJ must have a valid reason for finding a claimant not credible before finding that a 6 claimant does her activities of daily living differently than the claimant testifies to, then 7 relying on this speculation regarding the daily activities in order to support an adverse 8 credibility finding. See id. An ALJ's finding that a claimant is not credible must be based 9 on specific evidence that undermines the claimant's complaints, not on findings that 10 presume first that a claimant is not credible. See Greger v. Barnhart, 464 F.3d 968, 972 11 (9th Cir. 2006) (quoting Morgan v. Comm'r of Soc. Sec. Admin., 169 F.3d 595, 599 (9th 12 Cir. 1999)).

14 For these reasons and based on the record as a whole, the Court concludes that the 15 ALJ's reliance on plaintiff's activities of daily living as a basis to reject her allegations of 16 limitations is not based on substantial evidence in the record and does not entail clear and 17 convincing reasons for failing to credit fully plaintiff's credibility and allegations.

18 When failing to credit fully plaintiff's credibility, the only other reason provided 19 by the ALJ for her failure to credit fully plaintiff's credibility was the ALJ's finding that 20 plaintiff's "subjective reports of back and neck pain were out of proportion to the 21 objective medical evidence" (AR. 14). However, once a claimant produces medical 22 evidence of an underlying impairment, the ALJ may not discredit then a claimant's 23 testimony as to the severity of symptoms based solely on a lack of objective medical 24

1 evidence to corroborate fully the alleged severity of pain. Bunnell v. Sullivan, 947 F.2d 2 341, 343, 346-47 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) (citing Cotton, supra, 799 F.2d at 1407);
3 Social Security Ruling (“SSR”) 96-7p, 1996 WL 374186 at *2, 1996 SSR LEXIS 4 at *3 4 (this Ruling emphasizes that a claimant’s “statements about the intensity and persistence 5 of pain or other symptoms or about the effect the symptoms have on his or her ability to 6 work may not be disregarded solely because they are not substantiated by objective 7 medical evidence”). In addition, the Court notes that the ALJ’s finding that plaintiff’s 8 subjective reports were out of proportion to the objective medical evidence contradicts 9 the opinion of treating physician, Dr. Daniel H. Garcia, M.D., that plaintiff’s bone scan is 10 “consistent with the pain she has in her neck and lower back” and that it “is probably a 11 major source of her pain” (AR. 175).
12

13 For these reasons, the Court concludes that the ALJ’s finding that plaintiff’s 14 subjective reports “were out of proportion to the objective medical evidence” is not based 15 on substantial evidence in the record as a whole.

16 For the stated reasons and based on the record as a whole, the Court concludes that 17 the ALJ failed to provide clear and convincing reasons for her failure to credit fully 18 plaintiff’s allegations and credibility. The Court also concludes that this is not harmless 19 error.

21 The Ninth Circuit has “recognized that harmless error principles apply in the 22 Social Security Act context.” Molina v. Astrue, 674 F.3d 1104, 1115 (9th Cir. 2012) 23 (citing Stout v. Commissioner, Social Security Administration, 454 F.3d 1050, 1054 (9th 24 Cir. 2006) (collecting cases)). Recently the Ninth Circuit reaffirmed the explanation in 1 Stout that “ALJ errors in social security are harmless if they are ‘inconsequential to the 2 ultimate nondisability determination’ and that ‘a reviewing court cannot consider [an] 3 error harmless unless it can confidently conclude that no reasonable ALJ, when fully 4 crediting the testimony, could have reached a different disability determination.” Marsh

5 v. Colvin, 792 F.3d 1170, 2015 U.S. App. LEXIS 11920 at *7-*8 (9th Cir. July 10, 2015)
6 (citing Stout, 454 F.3d at 1055-56). Even though “the district court gave persuasive 7 reasons to determine harmlessness,” the Ninth Circuit reversed and remanded for further 8 administrative proceedings, noting that “the decision on disability rests with the ALJ and 9 the Commissioner of the Social Security Administration in the first instance, not with a 10 district court.” Id. (citing 20 C.F.R. § 404.1527(d)(1)-(3)).
11

12 Here, the Court concludes that the ALJ’s error is not inconsequential to the 13 ultimate disability determination because had the ALJ credited plaintiff’s allegations, the 14 residual functional capacity would have been different, affecting the determination of 15 whether or not plaintiff could perform her past work. See Marsh v. Colvin, 792 F.3d 16 1170, 2015 U.S. App. LEXIS 11920 at *7-*8 (9th Cir. July 10, 2015) (citing Stout, 454 17 F.3d at 1055-56). The Court cannot “confidently conclude that no reasonable ALJ, when 18 fully crediting the testimony, could have reached a different disability determination.” Id.
19 Therefore, this matter is reversed and remanded for further administrative proceedings, as 20 requested by plaintiff.
21

22 (2) Whether or not the ALJ erred in assigning the amount of weight given 23 to the opinions of treating physician Daniel Garcia, M.D.
24

1 The Court already has concluded that this matter must be reversed and remanded 2 due to the ALJ's error in the evaluation of plaintiff's credibility, see supra, section 1.
3 However, the Court briefly notes that the ALJ failed to credit the opinion of treating 4 physician, Dr. Garcia, in part with a finding that some of his opinions were based on 5 plaintiff's ability to be independent in her self-care and her activities of daily living (AR.
6 15). Since the Court has concluded that the ALJ made unsupported assumptions about 7 plaintiff's ability to do self-care and conduct activities of daily living, this rationale does 8 not support the ALJ's finding regarding the medical opinion of Dr. Garcia, see supra, 9 section 1. The Court also finds persuasive plaintiff's argument that "the ALJ does not 10 specifically address the amount of weight given to Dr. Garcia's opinion that [plaintiff] is 11 limited to 10 pounds occasional lifting and 5 pounds frequent lifting, occasional reaching, 12 and that she would miss three days per month of work [and] does not specifically state 13 why [she] does not accept the opinion [that] [plaintiff] is limited to less than six hours 14 standing in an eight hour workday" (Dkt. 13, p. 10). As noted by plaintiff, "the vocational 15 expert testified that the housekeeping job would be eliminated by the lifting restriction, 16 and the dietary assistant would be eliminated by the reaching limitation, and all jobs 17 would be eliminated by the absenteeism" (id. (citing AR. 47-49)). Therefore, these 18 opinions by the treating physician constitute significant probative evidence that the ALJ 19 should have discussed explicitly, as the Commissioner "may not reject 'significant 20 probative evidence' without explanation." Flores v. Shalala, 49 F.3d 562, 570-71 (9th 21 Cir. 1995) (quoting Vincent v. Heckler, 739 F.2d 1393, 1395 (9th Cir. 1984) (quoting 22 Cotter v. Harris, 642 F.2d 700, 706-07 (3d Cir. 1981))). The "ALJ's written decision 23

1 must state reasons for disregarding [such] evidence.” Flores, supra, 49 F.3d at 571. This 2 error, too, should be corrected following remand of this matter.

- 3 (3) Whether or not the ALJ erred in determining the plaintiff had the 4 residual functional capacity (“RFC”) to perform light work, could lift 5 and/or carry 20 pounds occasionally and 10 pounds frequently, could 6 stand and/or walk for 6 hours in an 8-hour work day, could sit for 6 7 hours in an 8-hour work day, could frequently climb, balance, stoop, 8 kneel, crouch, and crawl, and could frequently reach in all directions.

9 As a necessity, the RFC needs to be evaluated anew following remand of this 10 matter based on the errors already discussed, see supra sections 1 and 2. Similarly, the 11 ALJ’s step four finding regarding plaintiff’s ability to perform past work must be 12 evaluated anew following remand of this matter.

13 CONCLUSION

14 Based on the stated reasons and the relevant record, the Court ORDERS that this 15 matter be REVERSED and REMANDED pursuant to sentence four of 42 U.S.C. § 16 405(g) to the Acting Commissioner for further consideration consistent with this order.

17 JUDGMENT should be for plaintiff and the case should be closed.
